Abstract

5

The present invention provides a method of minimizing absorption of visible light in an ink composition comprising an IR-absorbing metal-dithiolene dye, comprising preselecting said dye such that it includes at least one moiety for reducing intermolecular interactions between adjacent dye molecules.

The method is especially suitable for use in connection with netpage and Hyperlabel systems.